Section B - Course Overview

The BA (Hons) Film Production course at the University seeks to provide a challenging educational experience and emphasises critical understanding, creative practice and collaborative working, social awareness and responsibility. We encourage students to challenge their preconceptions, work imaginatively and be curious about the world which they aim to represent.

The course is designed in accordance with the vocational emphasis of the University's mission statement and strategic aims to equip students with a broad range of competencies and skills in film production and the opportunity to gain specialist knowledge whilst fostering creativity.

The course philosophy is grounded in the belief that working in moving image is a social practice and students are encouraged to consider their work in terms of its contemporary meaning and relevance. Students explore both documentary and its associated forms and fiction and storytelling. The course promotes an integrated approach to theory and practice and students are encouraged to recognise the relationships between historical knowledge of the medium and theoretical understanding of their own practice.

Alongside group activities students are expected to undertake independent study and research which together with the broader transferable skills equips them for their chosen area of employment, lifelong learning and creative practice or postgraduate study.

With a strong commitment to traditional craft-based skills, the course is well equipped with 16mm film and digital video production and post-production facilities, a purpose-built studio and cinema, and enjoys strong links with and valued support from the industry.

Section C - Course Aims

The course aims to enhance students' employability and support their creativity by enabling students to:

- A1 develop critical, intellectual, creative and practical abilities in moving image production
- A2 identify and explain the critical and theoretical debates and historical developments in moving image production and their relationship to wider cultural contexts
- A3 engage productively in team working and sustained independent study
- A4 achieve a high standard of working knowledge of production processes
- A5 prepare themselves for employment in the audio-visual industries, for lifelong learning or post-graduate study through the development of specialist and transferable skills in moving image practice and theory.

Section D - Course Outcomes

Upon successful completion of the course students are able to:

Knowledge and Understanding

- LO1 engage with creative and productive group working and peer group learning
- LO2 demonstrate an ability for sustained independent study, research and problem-solving.
- LO3 consider and evaluate their own work in a reflexive manner with reference to academic and professional issues, debates and conventions
- LO4 understand and deploy knowledge of practical processes, approaches and skills in moving image production and theory, some of which are at the forefront of the discipline

Application

- LO5 identify and apply a range of transferable skills and qualities in the appropriate professional, social or educational context including the exercise of initiative, personal responsibility and decision-making in complex and unpredictable contexts
- LO6 understand the wider cultural and social context of moving image practice and demonstrate an awareness of the responsibility of the practitioner towards subjects and audiences.

Section E - Learning, Teaching and Assessment

Learning and Teaching Strategy

Learning and teaching on the Film Production course combines structured teaching and independent study to give students maximum responsibility for the management of their own learning.

Practical projects are taught through a pattern of technical and creative workshops, tutorials, reviews and final critiques or reviews which encourage a high level of learner activity, interaction with others and combine peer and self- assessment in the reflection encouraged by the debates. The group working practices support sustained learner activity and interaction with others through the production of a shared outcome. These activities are supported and monitored through online blogs and e-learning (MyUCA and Edmodo).

Practice units in the final year require students to develop their own briefs, negotiating their own schedule of work and specific outcomes and these are supported through the production of Learning Agreements, on which staff will give constructive feedback. Presentation skills are developed throughout the course in reviews and critiques and in specific units where group or individual presentations and pitches (modeled on current professional practice) form part of the assessment requirements.

The more formal academic units where lectures and screenings form the basis of the teaching are supported through seminars and tutorials where students' learning is tested through their verbal reasoning. They are prepared for the assessment tasks through detailed briefings and workshops.

Professional skills are developed through workshop attendance, project work, work placement experience and extra curricula engagement with the medium which is supported by tutorials throughout the course in conjunction with the Careers Department and culminates in a professionally produced CV and online presence in the final Filmmaking Portfolio unit.

Formal teaching on the course is supplemented by organised field trips to festivals, master classes, exhibitions, trade fairs, museums and galleries (including Sheffield International Documentary Film Festival, the School of Sound, and events at the BFI Southbank and the London Film Festival, the National Gallery, the Photographers' Gallery and the V and A) and special guest screenings at the Farnham Maltings including the Future Shorts touring programme. Recent examples include a special screening of 'Notes on Blindness' by Peter Middleton and James Spinney with a Q and A session led by Simon Aeppli (October 2016).

Visiting lecturers give regular presentations of their own working practice and industry professionals are involved in teaching the specialist workshops. Recent examples include a visit by our graduate Danielle Clarke whose graduation project, Britain's Young Soldiers with director Joe Martin won the National RTS award for documentary (2010), to producing documentaries for Channel 4 and a soon-to-be-released feature film.

Assessment Strategy

Assessment on the course includes formative feedback to students throughout the development and production process of their practical projects and is supported through our online platforms using MyUCA and Edmodo for group blogs.

Group working is supported through tutorials and debriefing sessions after the presentation of final projects with students encouraged to reflect on their own contribution to the processes involved in the production of a shared outcome.

Written work is developmental in its approach to formative assessment with online submission of illustrated essays.

Section F - Enhancing the Quality of Learning and Teaching

The course is subject to the University's rigorous quality assurance procedures which involve subject specialist and internal peer review of the course at periodic intervals, normally of 5 years. This process ensures that the course engages with the applicable national Subject Benchmarks and references the Framework for Higher Education Qualifications.

All courses are monitored on an annual basis where consideration is given to:

- External Examiner's Reports
- Key statistics including data on retention and achievement
- Results of the Student Satisfaction Surveys
- Feedback from Student Course Representatives
